DESCRIPTION

What hath beauty to do with systematic theology?In this new monograph, Samuel G. Parkison explores this question by examining the relationship between Christ's divine beauty and regeneration and faith. In this doxologically flavored, dogmatically charged work, Parkison pulls from a variety of disciplines to demonstrate Christ's beauty, and the relevance of Christ's beauty on Christian theology.

ENDORSEMENTS

This fascinating study considers biblical soteriology as the believer being drawn into union with Christ through faith as beholding irresistible beauty. This is dogmatics in the service of the church at its finest.

Craig Carter
Craig Carter, Theologian in Residence, Westney Heights Baptist Church, Ajax, Ontario

... a compelling biblical case for retrieving the glorious beauty of the truth and goodness of the good news of Jesus Christ. 'Irresistible Beauty' is an important argument for appreciating the aesthetic dimension of saving faith.

Kevin J. Vanhoozer
Research Professor of Systematic Theology, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois

Only when the Spirit gives us eyes to behold the beauty of our triune God can we then truly know what is beautiful as we behold the glory of God's beatitude. Readers who want to plumb the nature of true beauty will do well to weigh carefully Dr. Parkison's arguments.

J. V. Fesko
Harriet Barbour Professor of Systematic and Historical Theology at Reformed Theological Seminary, Jackson, Mississippi; author, 'Reforming Apologetics: Retrieving the Classic Reformed Approach to Defending the Faith'

Parkison's work is a delight because of all the different subjects he broaches. Everything from philosophy, to history of interpretation, to exegesis is dealt with here. You will learn more than you planned on when you read this book.
