DESCRIPTION

Joel Littlefield's short, highly practical book will inspire pastors to develop coalitions, for their own good, to strengthen the local church, and advance the Kingdom of God. With very practical guidance on how to go about forming these alliances for joint action, Littlefield helps identify the important qualities to look for in coalition members, and inspires readers to see how leading by example is crucial, and being a disciple is as important as making disciples.

AUTHOR

Joel and his family planted New City Church in Bath, Maine where he has been the lead pastor since 2017. He has been married to his wife Callie since 2003, and together they have 4 children. Joel is a regional leader for The Pillar Network, a SEND Network church planter trainer, and the author of 'Beeline to the Cross: For Salvation and all of Life'.

ENDORSEMENTS

This book calls pastors to prepare for this reality by forming friendships—forming brotherhoods—with other pastors, so together they can bless, equip, and encourage one another. I believe every pastor will benefit from reading it and following its counsel.

Tim Challies
Author, 'Seasons of Sorrow'

... a gift to those who operate as lone rangers. Make time to read it, and make time to do it ... for the Kingdom.

Liam Garvie
Associate Pastor, Charlotte Chapel, Edinburgh, Scotland

When the church is facing an epidemic of discouragement, Joel calls us to the readily available vaccine of kingdom–minded togetherness. I have a sense that this may spark off a renewed movement of doctrinally–aligned and missionally–driven pastors.

David Meredith
Mission Director, Free Church of Scotland

... a groundbreaking, yet ageless guide for pastors, urging them to unite with like–minded peers to foster vibrant, flourishing communities of faith springing forth from their own dedication to kingdom living.

Robert Smith Jr.
Charles T. Carter Baptist Chair of Divinity, Beeson Divinity School, Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama
