ENDORSEMENTS

A top shelf piece of work by a top shelf pastor-scholar who has served the local church and the seminary inimitably for over two decades. We need more commentaries like this one. A case study in how to take the tools received in the classroom (think Vos, Ridderbos, Gaffin et al) and put them to use in serious exegetical and pastoral work, not to mention his well-placed polemical (Christ exalting) interaction with the NPP.

Dustyn Eudaly, PCA Minister and Westminster Theological Seminary PhD Candidate, Philadelphia, PA

There are numerous commentaries on this grand epistle, but not all convey the passion and zeal that Paul had for the truth of the Gospel of God's free grace in Jesus Christ. In this commentary, it is evident that David McWilliams is not only a superb exegete and theologian, he is also a true pastor, who deeply loves the Gospel that Paul preached as well as Christ's Church, which desperately needs to hear that Gospel today.

The eschatological and redemptive-historical framework of Paul's theology is evident throughout the exposition. It is an invaluable resource for both ministers and laymen, and it deserves a place on the shelf right next to Martin Luther's invigorating commentary.

"Yet another Galatians commentary? Here is one that makes a most welcome contribution in addressing a wide range of readers - pastors and teachers in the church, as well as many others interested in growing in their understanding of Paul's overall teaching and particularly of this important letter. Written against the background and reflecting a knowledgeable grasp of the scholarly debates, past and present, the author largely steers clear of those debates and remains focused throughout on tracing and expounding the apostle's argument for its own sake and with an eye to preaching. Having had the opportunity of reading this clear and gracefully written book during its production, I commend it most highly. Certainly it is one pastors ought to consider adding to theirs libraries."
