AUTHOR

Michael D. Williams is Professor of Systematic Theology at Covenant Theological Seminary, St Louis, Missouri. He holds degrees from the Moody Bible Institute, Calvin College, Harvard Divinity School, Grand Rapids Baptist Seminary and University of Toronto. An adult convert to the Christian faith, Dr. Williams has written particularly in the areas of the nature of theology and theological method, history, and human sexuality.

ENDORSEMENTS

A very readable and scholarly book. It treats seriously a theology that is often dismissed as baffling and distasteful by many Christians outside of the Dispensational world. A good book for those who are concerned by the trajectory taken by North American Evangelical culture, but who also wish to retain a Biblical, authentic Christian theology.

S. Backhouse, University of Oxford

"not a book about what was, but about what is still the instinctive, reflexive presumption of much popular Christianity."

Bryan Chapell
Pastor, Grace Presbyterian Church, Peoria, Illinois

"dispensationalist writers treated fully and fairly... Williams is particularly astute on the difficulties encountered in attempting to apply a 'literal hermeneutic' consistently in their theologies. This book deserves the kind of sober and serious attention it has devoted to its subject."

Mark A. Noll
Author of 'America's Book: The Rise and Decline of a Bible Civilization, 1794–1911'

"This is a superior work probably most helpful to those who have experience of traditional Dispensationalist and who are keen to think through its implications outside the realm of Bible interpretation and theology."

Crawford Gribben, Evangelical Times,
